Creative writing:

Describe the hottest day ever (in 3 paragraphs or one A4 side).

Speedily, the sun swam across the ocean, blue skies of America, scalding everything within it's reach. The heat was almost unbearable. Unenthusiastically, I trudged towards my parents, who were gulping ice-cold water down their throats like their life depended on it. It was the summer holidays, and my family and I had arrived at our destination - Florida.

I could smell barbecues and food trucks as I looked at all of the weary, scorched tourists.

Longing for shade. Spending hours in the smouldering heat in Disneyland was an incredible experience, yet I wished the temperature would decrease. I sat down and stroked the burning bench. A pool of sweat trickled down my forehead and created a puddle beneath me.

I was so overwhelmed by the experience though. "Come on, just a bit more to go," sighed Dad exhaustedly. I nodded and followed him towards the next 'meet-and-greet'.

That night, I slept in an airconditioned room with gusts of comforting winds dancing through the windows. I lay on my crisp sheets, staring at the ceiling and praying tomorrow wouldn't be as blistering as this day had been...

* Physically, my body was warning me not to carry on, but mentally I knew I couldn't waste another second here as I was aware we had limited time at each park. Time was running away!
